SEI, the first Marc Sadler signature kitchen for Euromobil

Falzé di Piave (Tv), 13.03.18 - SEI (six) is kitchen furniture featuring tops, side panels, shelves and accessories in general just six millimetres thick.

Designed for active users, this is a 'real' kitchen dedicated to those who consider the kitchen a place in which to work and live, rather than a mere status symbol.

Distinguished by a combination of laminates and quality materials which create contrasts, it is versatile and, importantly, inexpensive.

Its 'all laminate' configuration (with a technological variant in Fenix) is transformed into a luxury version by using marble, elm wood, antiqued stainless steel, etc. To use a saying from the fashion world: 'cashmere sweaters with tennis shoes', i.e. fashion conscious functional pragmatism.

MARC SADLER

An Austrian-born French man, Marc Sadler has lived and worked as a designer in France, the U.S.A., Asia and Italy. One of the first to graduate in "esthétique industrielle" at the ENSAD University of Art and Design in Paris with a dissertation on plastics, he was a pioneer in experimenting with materials and mixing technologies, which have become the distinctive traits of his work. In the early 70s he developed the first fully-recyclable thermoplastic ski boots which were thereafter industrialized by the Italian company Caber. Thanks to his eclecticism he now works as a consultant for companies involved with every industrial sector. He won the Compasso d'Oro award four times (1994, 2001, 2008 e 2014), and received one Mention of Honour (1998) and two Selections (1994 and 2008) by ADI Industrial Design Association. Through the years, his work has received many other international awards.
